The new semester of the Children's Developmental Clinic at the University of Maryland is underway. It's a great program for kids with special needs. It runs Saturdays from February 13th to April 16th.

Children receive 2 hours of one-on-one therapy with trained clinicians that cover language, social and motor skills. Parents get respite, education and fellowship. The program accepts kids from 4 years old to 13.

Parents can come to the University of Maryland School of Public Health building on Saturday, January 30th, February 6th, or February 13th at about 9:30 am to register.

The program begins on Saturday, February 13th, and that's the first day to bring children. The whole semester costs about $300, and financial aid may be available. The building can be challenging to find, so getting on campus early is helpful.

If you have any questions, please feel free to call or email Alicia Montgomery, the parent liaison.
